Read the following passage from a 19th-century novel and answer the questions that follow.

In the quaint village of Oakbridge, nestled amidst rolling hills and lush meadows, there lived a young woman named Emma. She was the daughter of a respected local merchant and possessed a sharp intellect and a lively spirit. Emma was an avid reader, immersing herself in the pages of novels that transported her to distant lands and eras.

One day, as Emma was exploring the dusty shelves of her father's library, she stumbled upon a hidden nook filled with ancient tomes. Among them, she found a weathered copy of Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice." Intrigued, she began to read, losing herself in the world of Regency England and the complexities of love and social hierarchy. As she turned the pages, Emma marveled at Austen's keen observations of human nature and her wit, which brought the characters to life.

In the days that followed, Emma found herself drawn into the story of Elizabeth Bennet and Mr. Darcy, their misunderstandings, and the eventual triumph of true love over societal expectations. The novel sparked a passion within her, inspiring her to write her own stories and explore the nuances of human relationships.
